Happening Trends

RESIMERCIAL DESIGN

Ampersand Studio

Have you heard the term Resimercial Design? Over the past couple of years since the pandemic ended, this style has become a popular design trend.

During the pandemic, people got comfortable working from their kitchens, bedrooms, living rooms, or wherever they could find accommodating work settings. Now that the pandemic is over, more and more employers are demanding employees return to work. Some employees no longer feel comfortable going back to the traditional work atmosphere.

Resimercial Design is a fusion of commercial and residential design elements that helps make a stiff work environment feel more relaxed and homelike. Take Ampersand Studios in Miami, for example, a co-working commercial environment that offers work studios and shared spaces that mimic elements found at home.

Many organizations have resorted to reconfiguring their spaces to retain and attract potential new employees. By adding a variety of natural elements and areas for people to retreat to focus, the typical open office space feels more relaxed and inviting. Also, warmer, neutral tones have emerged with this trend, as have more organic-shaped furnishings that have offered references to nature in the space.

Who doesn't want a more comfortable work environment?! What do you think about Resimercial Design? Let us know your thoughts on our social media or send an email to info@materialmatters.guru.

CURVED FURNITURE

I know curved furniture has been in for some time, but to me it feels timeless, especially when it's upholstered in a trending Bouclé' fabric like Sunbury Designs new Bouclé' collection called Leopold. Check out this fantastic fabric for yourself at sunburydesign.com.

Currently, I am also loving the more earthy, warm neutrals, such as Back Drop Paint's Studio Hours. It reminds me of the way the sand looks on the beach at sunset.

If you haven't heard of the band Rufus Du Sol, you are missing out on some really great vibe music. I love to listen to them on my drive home from Miami; it actually makes the time sitting in traffic not as painful.

And who doesn't love a great pair of jeans? I am really digging the wide-leg, baggy look right now. Pair it with a cool t-shirt, and you are ready to go!

If you are looking for a go-to scent for the summer, one of my favorite fragrances is from Maison Francis Kurkdjian, Aqua Vitae Forte. It's light with hints of citrus and floral notes and can be worn day or night.

As you know, I love being a resource for my clients. Currently, one of my favorite resources for inspiration is Andrew Martin's Interior Design Review. It is a collection of the top commercial, hospitality, and residential design projects from all over the world. It is a treasure trove of design inspiration, and I currently have volumes 15-26 in my library!

Through this newsletter, I hope you can get to know more about me and all things Material Matters.
